The upcoming EMO Hannover trade show in September promises to be both inspiring and informative. Considered the world's largest metalworking trade fair, companies and exhibitors from around the world will gather in Germany to showcase some of the most advanced metalworking technology in the world.

Metalworking is a broad term that applies to a variety of practices, but it basically involves using metal to create parts, small or large.

The German Machine Tool Builder's Association VDW will be organizing the fair. The slogan and theme used this year for EMO Hannover is "Intelligence in Production." Complementing this is the German Engineering Federation's (VDMA) congress on "Producing More Intelligently," which is held to discuss challenges the future poses for humanity and technology.

There are an impressive amount of exhibitors attending from all over the world. According to the website, 60% of companies are from outside of Germany, making this a truly international show.

American companies and groups make up a good deal of the exhibition. Such organizations, like the Association For Manufacturing Technology (AMT), will be present. The organization, founded in 1902, represents American manufacturing technology and its members by providing support, businesses assistance, and analysis for companies.

The AMT also has a deal to organize the International Manufacturing Technology Show (IMTS) held in Chicago on every even-numbered year, where EMO is held every odd number in Europe.

Smaller countries such as Singapore are also featured. Digi-Pas, a brand under JSB Tech is an upcoming Singapore company that focuses on high precision electronic inclinometers (which measure slope and elevation). The company holds numerous patents in the areas of advanced technology deployment to electronic products and its related manufacturing processes. The company has 20 years experience and offices in USA, UK, and Germany, as well as Japan.

There will also be a seminar that focuses on India. As India is one of the fastest growing markets, EMO will highlight the country and talk about the current economic situation of the country as well as its projected future with regards to technology.
